Dimen in Transition

Joanne Kwan, Marie Lee, Jennifer Little and Anastasya Uskov

The village of Dimen, home to the Kam people of China, has been secluded from the world for countless generations. However, the tumultuous changes of modernity have reached even Dimen, and over the past several decades the Kam have found themselves caught in between maintaining their cultural roots and assuming the trends and values of mainstream Chinese culture. In an attempt to preserve the old and document the new, students and faculty from the Department of Visual Arts here at Pacific have captured the changing times in photography, film, writing and drawing.
